What Makes MoMA Design Store Different

Do you know how we choose products for MoMA Design Store? Or what informs our unique point of view? How it can be beneficial from educational point of view.

Our point of view is uniquely informed by MoMA's historical relationship to design. In 1932, The Museum of Modern Art established the world's first curatorial department devoted to architecture and design. MoMA has long recognized design's important role in our culture alongside more traditional mediums like painting and sculpture.

Our selection process

First, we assess a potential new product against our design filters, a set of criteria that we use to ensure every item is a good fit with our vision of good design. Next, each proposed product is evaluated by MoMA's curatorial department. Only those items that make it through these two steps successfully can become part of our assortment.

- 1. In or Related to MoMA's Collection
The Museum of Modern Art establishes the world's first curatorial department devoted to architecture and design. MoMA Design Store carries a selection of design objects from that collection. Many of the reference objects in the store and materials selected by the design community. MoMA's design collection is ever changing, a reflection of the evolving field of design itself.
- 2. In or Related to MoMA Exhibitions

Let the Sun Shine

Little Sun is a solar-powered LED lamp developed by artist Claes Elvasson and solar engineer Frederik Ottersen, designed to deliver clean, affordable, reliable light to the 1.6 billion people worldwide without access to the electrical grid. Five hours of charging produces up to three hours of bright light (plus additional hours of lower light). Every purchase makes it possible for Little Sun to be sold in off-grid communities at locally affordable prices.
